History of A. Harry Moore School

The A. Harry Moore School opened its doors in 1931 to serve students with cardiac issues, physical disabilities, and diseases such as polio and Muscular Dystrophy. The school was built when Frank Hague was mayor of Jersey City and Arthur Harry Moore was Governor of the State. Both were in attendance at the laying of the cornerstone on May 5, 1931, and at the opening day ceremony in September of the same year.

History of the Relationship between NJCU and AHM

In 1963, Jersey City State College assumed control of A. Harry Moore School from the Jersey City School District.

Currently the student population consists of severely multiply disabled and medically fragile students. The typical A. Harry Moore student today is classified with a physical disability as well as a cognitive disability. Most students are functioning below a fourth grade level, and many students are far below that.

More than 10% of the students are “tube fed” and there are other students with tracheotomies as well as other medical issues.

AHM: Current Relationship

The NJCU special education program at the A. Harry Moore School facility (facility owned by Jersey City Board of Education) is still treated as special education provider which receives students from sending school districts.

School districts have the legal responsibility to provide special education and services to their students. School districts may provide the education and services in-district or, as may be determined appropriate in accord with individualized education program requirements, in out-of-district placements.

Placement in the NJCU program at the AHM facility is considered placement in an out-of-district setting. Sending districts, including the Jersey City School District pay tuition to the University to provide special education and services to the students they send to the program.

Enrollment at AHM

Ten Years ago, enrollment at AHM had approximately 150 students; today, it only enrolls 93.

This enrollment is composed by mixture of Jersey City students and out of district students. Currently, AHM has 75 JC students and 18 out of district students.

The decrease in enrollment is partially due to the districts' ability to mainstream a larger amount of students (as mandated by the State) and the fact that the facility can no longer house students in its 5 floors (it currently only has them condensed into 3 floors).

Tuition is dependent on the programmatic needs of the students. As enrollment drops, the per student costs increases.

AHM: Facilities

There have been many reports that have outlined the issues with the current facility. In 2006 a State report outlined the many issues with the building and designated it as one of the six in the city that needed repairing.

In 2011 an engineering report identified and listed approximately $11.3 million in capital renewal and deferred maintenance projects for AHM.

An updated report was compiled for AHM in 2016, which listed approximately $16.3 million in capital renewal and deferred maintenance items. Approximately $10.4 million were listed as high priority and should be addressed.

AHM

On September 5th, the first day of school, a part of the portico fell, resulting in the closure of the school. Structural engineers were brought in by JCBOE to determine the damage to the building. They conducted tests and determined that it was unsafe to enter.

On Monday, September 9th, a number of elected officials, JCBOE representatives and University officers had a meeting in which they decided to work towards a solution that would ensure the school would remain operational in a way in which it would serve its students in the best possible way.

Since then, a preliminary engineering report has identified some additional issues with the building that will keep it closed for the foreseeable future; therefore, AHM will be moving its operations to Regional Day School.
